Easter and Summer 2018
3-7 April & late-July / August at London South Bank University

BYO's Workshop programme gives singers an opportunity, in an intimate and closed environment, to explore roles, character, the relationships between text and music, creativity and interpretation without the pressure of performance.

Preliminary auditions will be held in London, Birmingham, Cardiff, Glasgow and Manchester during January 2018.
Recall auditions will be held in London on 17, 18 and 24 February 2018.

Auditionees should prepare three contrasting arias, including one in English (this can be translation). An accompanist will be provided.

All applications must be accompanied by a £20.00 payment towards the cost of auditions by bank transfer with a printout of the on-line payment receipt attached to your application form (to account name British Youth Opera, sort code 40-52-40, account number 00019314) or by cheque (payable to British Youth Opera). Payments from candidates who are not selected for an audition will be refunded.

British Youth Opera is the UK's premier company for training new and emerging operatic talent. It offers valuable opportunities for young singers to receive professional training in all aspects of opera through workshops, and to take part in rehearsals and performances in its annual Summer Season of opera at the Peacock Theatre in London.

BYO's primary purpose is to offer operatic experience to singers who have a serious aim of pursuing careers in opera performance, are at the start of their careers, and are new to the profession.

- To that end, in selecting singers for audition, BYO will give preference to applications from singers of any nationality who are studying full-time at a music college in the United Kingdom.
- BYO will also consider applications from singers who are about to start, or who have recently finished, such study in the United Kingdom.
- BYO may, at its discretion, consider applications from other singers resident in the UK, where such applications contain evidence that the applicant has a serious aim of pursuing a career in opera performance, is at the start of his or her career, and is new to the profession.
- All applications must be counter-signed by the applicant's singing teacher or vocal coach, confirming that the applicant would benefit from and is suitable for a training place with BYO.

British Youth Opera is a training organisation; successful candidates do not pay to participate in the Summer Season (for which a contribution towards subsistence will be given) or the Opera Workshops.

Accommodation in London can be provided for a limited number of successful applicants who would otherwise be unable to participate.

British Youth Opera regrets that it is unable to provide feedback on auditions and reserves the right to alter the proposed programme.

About British Youth Opera

British Youth Opera was founded in 1987 to provide emerging singers on the threshold of their careers with professional rehearsal and performance opportunities. We work to provide the very best training and professional development through an annual programme of workshops and fully staged operas at Sadler's Wells' Peacock Theatre in partnership with Southbank Sinfonia.

Summer Season productions are rehearsed by directors and conductors with a wealth of experience and a particular gift for nurturing and developing emerging talent. Participants are coached in all aspects of their craft with vocal coaching, dialogue, music and language coaching given by leading experts in their respective fields.

This chance to learn from experienced professionals is also offered to assistant directors, conductors, designers, répétiteurs, stage management and other technical trainees.

Music critics, casting directors and agents regard BYO's Summer Season as an opportunity to view the next generation of professional opera singers.

In the Summer Season productions, singers participate as principals, covers or chorus, or a combination of these:

Principals

Each opera has a single cast of principals who sing at all performances. Rehearsals start with a week of music preparation, working with the conductor, vocal coach, and language coach if appropriate. Production rehearsals then follow for several weeks during which the director, movement director and designer create a production around the company, with continued coaching.

In the final days of rehearsals, the company moves into the theatre for a series of rehearsals on stage with both piano and orchestra, followed by a dress rehearsal in preparation for the first night. There are three performances of each production.

Covers (Understudies)

Each opera has a full cast of covers who sing if a principal is sick and who perform a cover showing of 60 to 75 minutes duration on stage with orchestra. The cover cast is thoroughly rehearsed by the Assistant Conductor and Assistant Director as well as having coaching. Watching the rehearsals with the principal cast during the day, covers have their own rehearsals in the evening, and their own stage rehearsals in the theatre.

Chorus

Rehearsals start with music sessions after which the chorus will work with the production team to create the chorus scenes in the rehearsal room before moving to the theatre.

Opera Workshops

BYO's Opera Workshop programme gives singers an opportunity in an intimate and closed environment to explore roles, character, the relationships between text and music, creativity and interpretation without the pressure of performance. These usually last for five days and numbers are limited so as to ensure the best experience for those involved.

Who should apply?

It is not necessary for singers to have previous stage experience, but they should be receiving regular singing lessons and have a serious interest in pursuing a career in opera.
